▲ A small section of the vacuum show at the 37th Annual Symposium, Toronto, Canada, November 1990. Note the crowds in the aisles, beloved by all exhibitors. The exhibitors at the AVS shows are typically very loyal and helpful to the Society, even when we schedule a meeting in the scientific boardrooms, such as Reno.

▼ Larry L. Kazmerski at a reception at the Boeing Museum of Flight at the 38th Annual Symposium, Seattle, Washington, November 1991. It was the custom for many years to deck the BoD with distinctive headgear at the annual reception, so that members could easily identify the leadership!

▲ Speakers at the Thin Film Division history session in 1993. AVS' 40th Anniversary brought together a great collection of the people who have sustained the Society as a largely volunteer operation. (L to R) Maurice Francombe, John Vossen, Gottfried Wehner, William Westwood, David Hoffman.

▼ James S. Solomon demonstrating the force of atmospheric pressure to children at the Harold Schell elementary school in West Carroll, Ohio, 1992. The Education Committee pioneered a Science Educators' Workshop in 1990.

◀ Frank Jansen was Program Chair for the 1990 symposium in Toronto. He was lucky to find Lynn Pizzo, Conference Secretary, to handle the abstract processing.

▼ The AVS 37th Annual Symposium was held in Toronto, Canada, the first time outside the United States. The intrepid Local Arrangements Chair was Frank Shepherd (right), seen with Bill Westwood, long-time AVS Secretary.

► Richard Colton, together with Jim Munday and Larry Kazmerski were instrumental in founding the Nanoscience and Technology Division in 1992.

▼ On August 25, 1993, the AVS moved into its new home on the 32nd floor at 120 Wall Street, New York, New York.

▲ Yvonne Towse joined AVS in 1993 as Office Manager at their new headquarters at 120 Wall Street and was promoted to Administrative Director in 1998 and Managing Director in 2008.
